Three Beaches

Candy Beach, Thailand

Thailand has so many great beaches, but Candy Beach is really special. The only way to go there is by sea. Don't worry if you don't have your own boat though, there are lots of places to rent them. There's lots to do and see – it's a perfect place to go windsurfing, or you can just sit on the beach, have an ice cream or read. Just remember that they don't allow any dogs or other pets on the beach.

Golden Sands, Greece

If you've seen the movie "Another Camera", you might remember that beautiful beach. Well, that was actually Golden Sands, which is one of the most popular beaches in Greece. They let visitors drive onto the beach with their own boats, so they can go sailing and fishing. A lot of people do that, and many photographers travel there for the amazing views of the coast. And just behind the beach there is a 700-year-old castle, which looks beautiful in the evening.

Deep Water Beach, South Africa

Most days, thousands of whales come very close to this beach in South Africa. If you're there, you'll probably see them, which is fantastic. You can also see the modern town of Stanway from this lovely beach, but the beach is usually very quiet. That all changes at weekends. Then local people come here to have a barbecue with family and friends. It's often too windy to swim, but nobody worries about it. They're all busy playing football on the beach and having fun.

This beach is good for water sports.

Read the article about three books about nature for young people and answer the questions.

Three Books about Nature for Young People

“What Animals Eat”

In this book, science writer Hong Jung-mi helps us to understand more about what animals eat. It includes many amazing bits of information that you probably didn’t know. For example, some kinds of rats never drink water. Other rats eat mice. If snakes eat some of the rats, this helps the mice because there are fewer rats. So, snakes are dangerous for rats, but they actually make the world safer for mice.

“Life Below”

The world’s rivers, lakes and seas are full of animals of all shapes and sizes! Several of these are described in detail in this book from nature writer Ionat Burca, who also took some of the photographs. Sadly, the seas are full of plastic, and when animals see this, they often think it is food. This is always bad for them, and can sometimes make them very ill.

“Year of Animals”

This book has an article about a different animal on every page. It’s a big book, and there’s one for every day of the year. Most pages also have lovely drawings of the animals by the artist Edgar McDaniels. There’s an important message too. These days, wild animals have less space, less food to eat and less water to drink. These are the things that all animals need. And their world is becoming more dangerous. That’s why they need us. If we don’t try to save them, says writer Marla Semmens, who will?

This book has beautiful pictures.

Three Books about Nature for Young People

“What Animals Eat”

In this book, science writer Hong Jung-mi helps us to understand more about what animals eat. It includes many amazing bits of information that you probably didn't know. For example, some kinds of rats never drink water. Other rats eat mice. If snakes eat some of the rats, this helps the mice because there are fewer rats. So, snakes are dangerous for rats, but they actually make the world safer for mice.

“Life Below”

The world's rivers, lakes and seas are full of animals of all shapes and sizes! Several of these are described in detail in this book from nature writer Ionat Burca, who also took some of the photographs. Sadly, the seas are full of plastic, and when animals see this, they often think it is food. This is always bad for them, and can sometimes make them very ill.
